Whereas eternity "abides," temporal deictic time passes through past, present, and future; it passes out of being. Augustine claims, then, that there is one objectively existing time, the present, and that the other "times" are just shorthand for operations the mind performs on that fleeting present.

Since therefore eternity is not a part of time, forasmuch as eternity exceeds time, and includes it, it seems that time is a part of eternity, and is not a different thing from eternity. Objection 2. Further, according to the Philosopher (Phys. iv), the "now" of time remains the same in the whole of time .

SUMMA THEOLOGIAE: The eternity of God (Prima Pars, Q. 10)

God promises to be with us during life, in death, in times of plenty and need. None of us fully understands the ebb and flow of the universe, and constant change can render us immobile.
